QCA Northern Ireland has a statutory remit for the regulation of NVQs in Northern Ireland and has had an office based in Belfast since 1996.

The programme of work in Northern Ireland is sponsored by the Department for Employment and Learning.

A part of this programme is to lead on e-assessment for vocational programmes and qualifications.

the efutures project was designed to:

- inform DEL's strategy for e-learning
- contribute to regulation policy and initiatives that would support the use of e-assessment in vocational qualifications
- establish a set of good practice guidelines to support centres in the development of an e-assessment strategy and action plan

www.efutures.org

current work:

- enhance and add to the efutures website and extend its relevance to other parts of UK
- work with FE institutions to help them develop strategies and action plans for getting the best from e-assessment
- work with FE and other centres to identify the key components of effective e-assessment implementation and share good practice with other providers

www.efutures.org

the website

- forms the main platform for the information and guidance to centres on e-assessment
- focuses on centre management as well as practitioners
- has the endorsement of a range of participating centres and partners
- will be the one-stop-shop for all things 'e'
